The M&H postcards project was first put in to practice in Barcelona this past September with some girlfriends. The idea was to hide the postcards under or in the clothes inside one of the stores. The project was to be reconducted after my return from Uruguay, in Barcelona again, but this time it'd be in a "happening" way. The participants would be disguised as fashion victims (with hats and sunglasses to be as anonymous as possible) and we would directly distribute the cards to the customers... maybe with music and some pre-established slogans... This project deals with the companies iconography that tends to reduce women to sexual stereotyped objects. The collective we made in relation to this project is called "Las Peludas," which means "The Shaggy Girls." We've made a website specially dedicated to that part of our activities in order to insist about the idea of accepting out philosophy (hairiness)... because something is to be said:

"I'm feeling really gorgeous and highly sexy being shaggy!"

The second event we organised in Barcelona was entitled "Women, Art & Activism." The idea was to reunite women working in Barcelona, just to get in touch, to exchange some information and experiences, to know their work and projects. the result was great! half of the girls didn't know each other or just had heard of... Collectives like "Marita" "YoMango" "Lesbifem" "Les Penelopes" "Las Peludas" "Rotorrr" "Ctrlr" artists like Virginia Villaplana, Maria Ruido, Tatiana De La O, Angelika Levi, etc, were present. You can see the information here:

It's in Spanish and Catalan, sorry!

We'd like to do the same in Paris! If you know some French/Parisian rioting grrrls, tell us!
